A police station is like a home. Officers who work in the police station are like housekeepers. The cops often provide assistance to the public, which they also do at their homes. Officers admit that having to work in the police station sometimes makes them feel lonely, worried about their jobs and how it affects their personal lives. To help themselves decide whether they like working in the job, they compare it to what they would do if they were not there for this obligation. The story begins with Ramesh getting into an argument with his wife Usha about whether or not he should leave his job as a cop for good and join the family business of running a grocery store full time. Usha is not going to let him quit his job and wants him home with her and their two children, but Ramesh is a no-nonsense cop who likes the power that comes with being a police officer. As he leaves for work, he says to her, "I have no sympathies for criminals." He apologizes for being harsh but says that is the way things are in his line of work. The couple share a lingering look, which suggests they have at one time been happy together. Once at the police station, Ramesh meets with his partner, who is also Ramesh's best friend named Raja. The two are seen joking around together in the station, which greatly contrasts how they are at home. Raja wants to take a vacation to Malaysia where he has never been before, but Ramesh insists that they have too much work to get done. Later on in the day, Ramesh encounters a man named Selvam while patrolling the streets of Madras. Selvam is extremely nervous and jittery around the police officer. After he runs off, Ramesh checks out his record and learns that he is wanted by the police for causing trouble in an area that borders Singapore. Ramesh suspects that Selvam is involved in some kind of underground activity, since the record states that he was last seen in Singapore. After he goes home, Ramesh learns that his wife is leaving him after six years of marriage. When Ramesh asks why she would do that, she says it is because he is not around enough to take care of her and the children even though he provides for them by working as a police officer. She tells him that she needs to go with her parents for a while because she cannot feel safe or secure living in Madras alone. He protests, but she is adamant. Ramesh does not want to let his family go, which deeply affects him because he did not expect this to happen to him at all. The next day, Raja approaches Selvam near the border of Singapore and takes him into custody without much resistance on his part. Later, he confesses to Ramesh that he could have let Selvam get away but did not because he knew what was best for everyone in the long run. He explains that while Selvam has done nothing wrong in Singapore yet, if he is allowed to continue roaming around freely there, he will do it again and again until someone loses their life over it.
